

I recently lost my virginity, which to say the least... wasn't a pleasant experience. It was a wrong place/person/time situation and I had a really hard time dealing with it and now I'm starting to accept what happened.

So I have 2 questions...

How bad would it be for me to still claim to be a virgin? I had no intentions of having sex with him... and it kind of just happened. I know I'll physically never be a virgin again but would it be bad/stupid for me to try and forget about this, forget it never happened and not "count" it?

And also I felt just about nothing while it was happening. That's part of the reason it did happen. All of a sudden I looked up and I could see him moving but i could just barely feel some pressure. I read in a couple posts back that this could be some type of medical issue.

I've tried googling it but I can't really find anything definitive, so my question for you guys is What type of medical problem could it be and is it something tha I *need* to get checked out soon, or if I don't plan on having sexc for a while can I just not worry about until I decide to start having sex?

[Redacted]

[Redacted]

[Redacted]

[Redacted]

[Redacted]

[Redacted]

[Redacted]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]  [REDACTED]  [REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

 tacit
November 3 2007, 20:00:50 UTC  CHECK COLLAPSE

How bad would it be for me to still claim to be a virgin?

Really, really bad.

Lying to people who are close to you is bad. Lying to lovers is especially bad. A healthy relationship can not exist on a foundation of lies. If the people you lie to discover your lie, they're going to be hurt, and they're not going to trust you any more. If you begin a new sexual relationship on a lie, expect to get dumped flat on your ass if your partner ever finds out.

A lie sows that you do not trust your partner and respect your partner enough to share the truth. A lie shows that you can not be trusted. Of all the ways to undermine friendships and destroy relationships, a lie is the fastest and most effective. It is a betrayal of your partner and your relationship. Lies are the relationship equivalent of nuclear weapons--they cause destruction on a massive scale and permanently alter the landscape. Even if your partner forgives you for lying, the odds are good he will never trust you again.

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

I know I'll physically never be a virgin again but would it be bad/stupid for me to try and forget about this, forget it never happened and not "count" it?

Yes.

It happened. Wishing it away or pretending it didn't will never change that. You can not alter the past. It happened.

One of the greatest measures of a person's maturity and wisdom is how that person behaves when that person does something that he or she later regrets. You are not perfect; nobody is. You will make mistakes and do things you regret. The value of who you are as a human being lies in how well you acknowledge and deal with the mistakes you make. Good judgment comes from experience; experience comes from bad judgment.

Never lie to a partner.